"An innovative approach would be necessary in order to transform such basic material into something extraordinary. Working together, Nothard and St. John married indoor and outdoor spaces that combine landscape, light, natural materials and graceful lines that produce a thoughtful, serene whole, fully reflective of its owner...Situating at the water's edge, the house now has visual continuity from outside in and inside out. Nothard notes, 'We floated cabinets so that no walls go to the ceiling, instead they work as partitions and pivot the orientation.'"
